

Climbing elves

It's widely believed that climbing elves are the best at climbing because of their sharp claws and extensive knowledge of the forest. Did you know that they have the power of invisibility so they can hide from elf hunters? WARNING! DON'T PUT THEM NEAR WATER OR THEY WILL LOSE THEIR POWERS!

Rumour has it that climbing elves have polished green skin and are about the size of a frog. Most have a luscious purple mane and almost all of them wear acorn hats. As they have quite stubby legs and arms it is quite hard for them to run, so they climb instead. Additionally they have large eyes, pointy shoes and the adult males have small horns. Generally they have squeaky voices (although a rare few have deep voices) and they wear materials that they have stolen from human's houses.

At the age of 5 they can become invisible. Surprisingly they can climb from when they are born, as long as they are taught by their elders. Unfortunately one of their weaknesses is water because it can take away their powers and make them vulnerable to hunters. Sadly the winter months bring problems due to the rain.

All climbing elves live in trees with their families. Each family is called a podd. Contrary to popular belief, they do try to live in harmony with other elves, although some elves find them too mischievous. The majority of them eat acorns, berries, nuts, and they LOVE blueberries.

For fun they like to: dance, sing (karaoke mainly), play tag and compete. They often like to sneak into human's houses and steal from them, which they do at night because they are nocturnal. They LOVE marbles as they think they are jewels. As they live in tree holes for shelter, they are in a war with squirrels and birds who also want these holes for Shelter. It doesn't help that climbing elves anger the squirrels and birds further by stealing their nuts and twigs (as you can see they have a habit of stealing!)

Should they be hunted? No! They are kind and sweet and have not done anything wrong but some humans don't like how they steal.

How to trap them? Well if you did need to trap them then water would be best so you can see them. You'd also need to do it at night time as they are hiding in their trees, sleeping during the day.

Can you keep them as pets? No! Climbing elves need to remain in their habitat and as they steal, are nocturnal and can turn invisible they wouldn't be much fun as a pet!

We need to save these poor creatures from water, from hunters and from those who are chopping down their homes. How would you like it if someone destroyed your home?
