These pots are from Sweden.

They are over 4,000 years old.
